Sinclair Crest

The Crest Badge Belt has the Motto of the Chief of Clan Sinclair - "Commit Thy Work To God". Within the belt is the crest of the Clan Sinclair Chief A Rooster or Cock Proper. The belt and buckle denote the clansman. The Clansman's Crest Badge is the most powerful emblem of your Clan Sinclair Heritage. Wearing this is a symbol of your allegiance to your clan.

"Cuimhnich air na daoine o'n d'thaining thu"
Remember the men from whom you are descended!

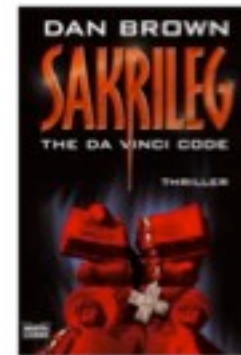

For centuries this Sinclair Family Crest has been a symbol of your Scottish Family unity. The Sinclair crest emblem is from your Clan Chief's Sinclair coat of arms. This Sinclair wall crest is first created by our master sculptor and then handmade in Cold Cast Bronze, using a unique process developed by us. This Sinclair wall Crest carries a cock and the proud Sinclair clan motto see above.

Sutherland Crest

This is the traditional crest of the Sutherland Clan, the clan of my mother's mother's mother.

Since by Scottish law only the head of the clan may display the Coat of Arms for personal use, most Scots display their clan tartan and their clan badge as a sign of affiliation with the family.

Oddly, the clan affiliation for those not of the noble house is actually passed down along the lines of the mother's side of the family. My brother cannot pass this crest to his children, but my sister can.

The Sutherland badge is, like almost all other badges, a coiled belt. Inside the belt, resting on a twine of cord, gules and or (the Sutherland family colors) is a wildcat rampant (yes, I know it looks more like a bloodthirsty squirrel, heraldic animals are often odd to look at.)

The motto Sans Peur, "Without Fear," is gathered at the apex of the badge, and behind, my own design, is a shield with the clan tartan. Specifically I chose to use the modern version, with richer colors.

MacKenzie Badges

There are two main types of badges. This is because in 1605 the chief of the clan, then the Earl of Seaforth, adopted the crest of his wife, heiress to Macleod of the Lewes, being a mountain in flames. The clan badge displays the crest of the clan chief. However most of the principle branches of the clan and the later formed Seaforth Highlanders regiment held the original "Kintail" crest of a golden stag's head.

Clan Mackenzie of Seaforth badge incorporating the crest of a Rock in Flames with the motto: "Luceo non Uro" meaning "I shine not burn".

Incorporating the original Mackenzie shield of a Stag's Head with the motto: "Cuidich 'N Righ" meaning "Help the King". The motto and stag's head come from the heroic rescue of King Alexander III by Colin MacCoinneach in 1263 who saved the king from a charging stag by shooting it dead with an arrow.
